whatever prosperity, whatever progress there has been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to nature's laws. There can be no advance in material things without obedience to law. That is a material order is equally true in the moral order.

The progress of the individual in the moral order to material things without obscience to law; therefore, when we come to measure our progress during this past year, or any other year, the answer will subscience to law; therefore, when we come to measure our progress during this past year, or any other year, the answer will always the propose of the following the content of the conquest of nature, but to been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to been is not due to the conquest of nature, but to been in mental vision, and, above all, his deep and abiding interest in the welfare of the opportunity to begin again—to start on a fresh voyage with a new compass and another chart." he said. "It is a great thing to save one woman, but what shall we say of him who saved 20,000 girls and asked them to walk a better way?

The progress of the individual in the moral order.

His entital vision, and, above all, his deep and abiding interest in the welfare of the opportunity to begin again—to start on a fresh voyage with a new compass and another chart." he said. "It is a great thing to save one woman, but what shall we say of him who saved 20,000 girls and asked them to walk a better way?

We alth is to be covered most because of work and on the control of course come pretty close to half a billion; and I think you will find that to no Hare we grown in respect and obedience to law? The same truth holds in the civil and social order of the nation. The progress of this country is just in proportion to the nation's regard for and obe-dience to law, its concern for the observance of law, and in that national progress, therefore, we have, or should have, our share.

It is a mistake to think that somehow the law is of itself going to be observed. There is no such thing as abstract observance of law. A nation respects and obeys its laws when the individuals that compose it respect and obey its laws. This obedience to recognized anthority and law is the that compose it respect and obey its laws. This obedience to recognized authority and law is the lesson which our Divine Lord taught us in eighteen years of His life, the period of which the Gospel telis us nothing more than this: "He went down to Nazareth and was subject to them"—subject to two of His creatures. He was their Creator; He held their very souls in the palm of His hand, yet "He was subject to them,"

For Obedience of Law.

If Christ, who was the All-wise God, devoted so much of His surthly life to inculcating by example the one lesson of obedience, then surely it behooves us to resolve in our mind to render obedience to law. If this sense of duty and absolute observance of law is in the hearts and minds of the people, then have their individual efforts toward the betterment of the neither provided by terment of the nation reverted back to them.

It is a blessing when a nation can point to its chief representatives in authority as setting the example of considuous regard for and obedience to law. It is a principle of Catholic theology that her chief pastors should show those committed to their charge by their core, literature to their charges by their core, literature in the contraction of the contraction their charge, by their own lives, the meaning of obedience, and it is fitting that we should to-day pay honce to one who is known, not only in this country, but throughout the world, as a prince of the Catholic Church, an ideal American citizen, an unbolder addender and the country. defender, and observer of the laws of his country and his church.

An elaborate musical programme had been prepared by the sanctuary choir, under R. Mills Silby, formerly of the Westminster Cathedral, of London, and the mixed choir, under Armand Gumprecht. The numbers were given with excellent effect. The selections included:

Prelude, "Exultas Sion" (Hameril), by the mixed choir; processional, "Hark! Hark! My Soul!" (Richardaon), and "Introit" (Silby), sanctuary choir; "Kyrie" (Haydn No. 3) and "Gloria" (Haydn No. 2), mixed choir; "Gradual" and Alleluia" (Silby) and "Veni Creator" (Parsous), sanctuary choir; "Credo" (Beethoven, in C), mixed choir; "Offertory" (Silby), "Offertory" (Motet), and "Adeste Fidelis" (Novello), sanctuary choir; "Sanctus," "Benedictus" and "Agous Dei" (Haydn No. 3), mixed choir; "Communion" (Silby), sanctuary choir; "Offertory" (Mr. John Mr. J choir; "Communion" (Silby), sanctuary choir; "O Holy Night" (Adam-Buck), mixed choir; recessional,

Before giving the blessing at the conclusion of the mass his eminence addressed a few words to the congregation, extending a New Year's greeting and wishing to each one "the peace that George A.
